Foreword

To recall the indomitable spirit of the old South to those who enjoy the new •
To enliven the thoughts of today and enhance the dreams of tomorrow with the fragrant memory of a past glory. To give to the world a vision of the traditions that have inspired the sons of Washington & Lee • To brighten the achievements of the past with the light of present endeavor - is the aim of the 1928 Calyx • • • • •

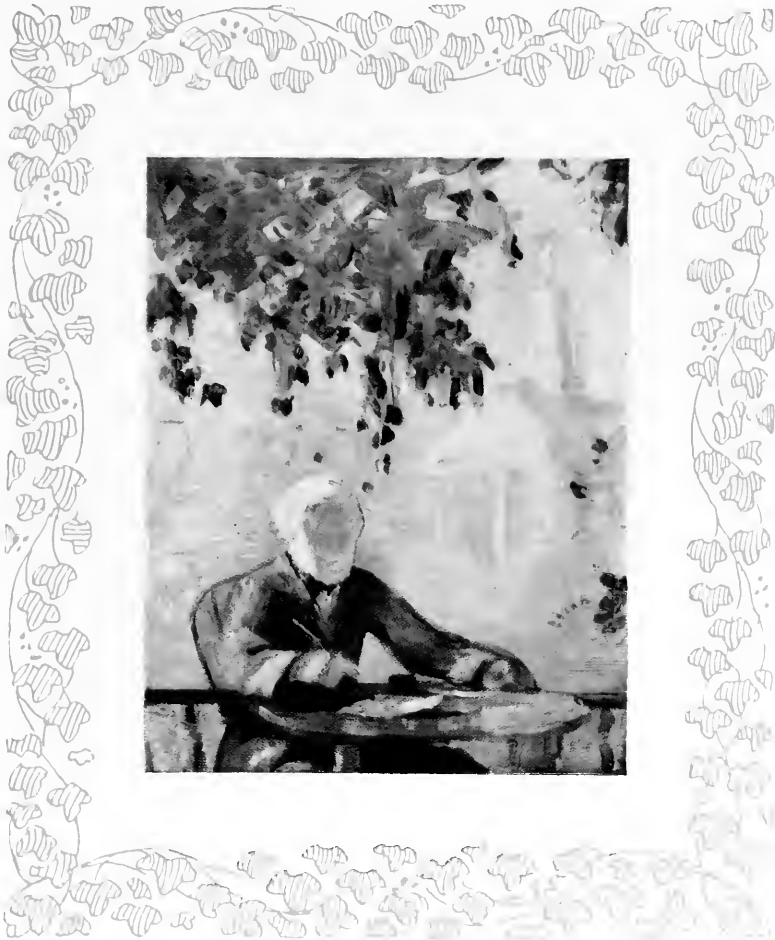

(Dedication)

To those men who have touched the zenith and filled the world with their fame; who have returned from the field of battle renowned, revered, and praised in every clime where the heart quickens in sympathy for surpassing valor united with transcendent genius and honor without a stain *

May those survivors of the decimated ranks of the Confederate Army, whose pride was never lessened in defeat be remembered always in the hearts of those who have gained their heritage To those scarred and sinewy veterans of fifty fields whose glories are still about them, is humbly dedicated this memorial of a college year * * * * *

*“Ye will not walk ignoble ways;
Ye dare not seek unworthy aims;
Ye can not do a deed that shames
Those heroes of the holiest days!
Your oath a Roman oath must be,
Sworn on a faith that will not yield;
Sworn on the doubly-sacred shield
Of Washington and Lee.”*

LIBERTY HALL—These walls, rich with memories, are now silent witnesses to the grandeur that is Washington and Lee.

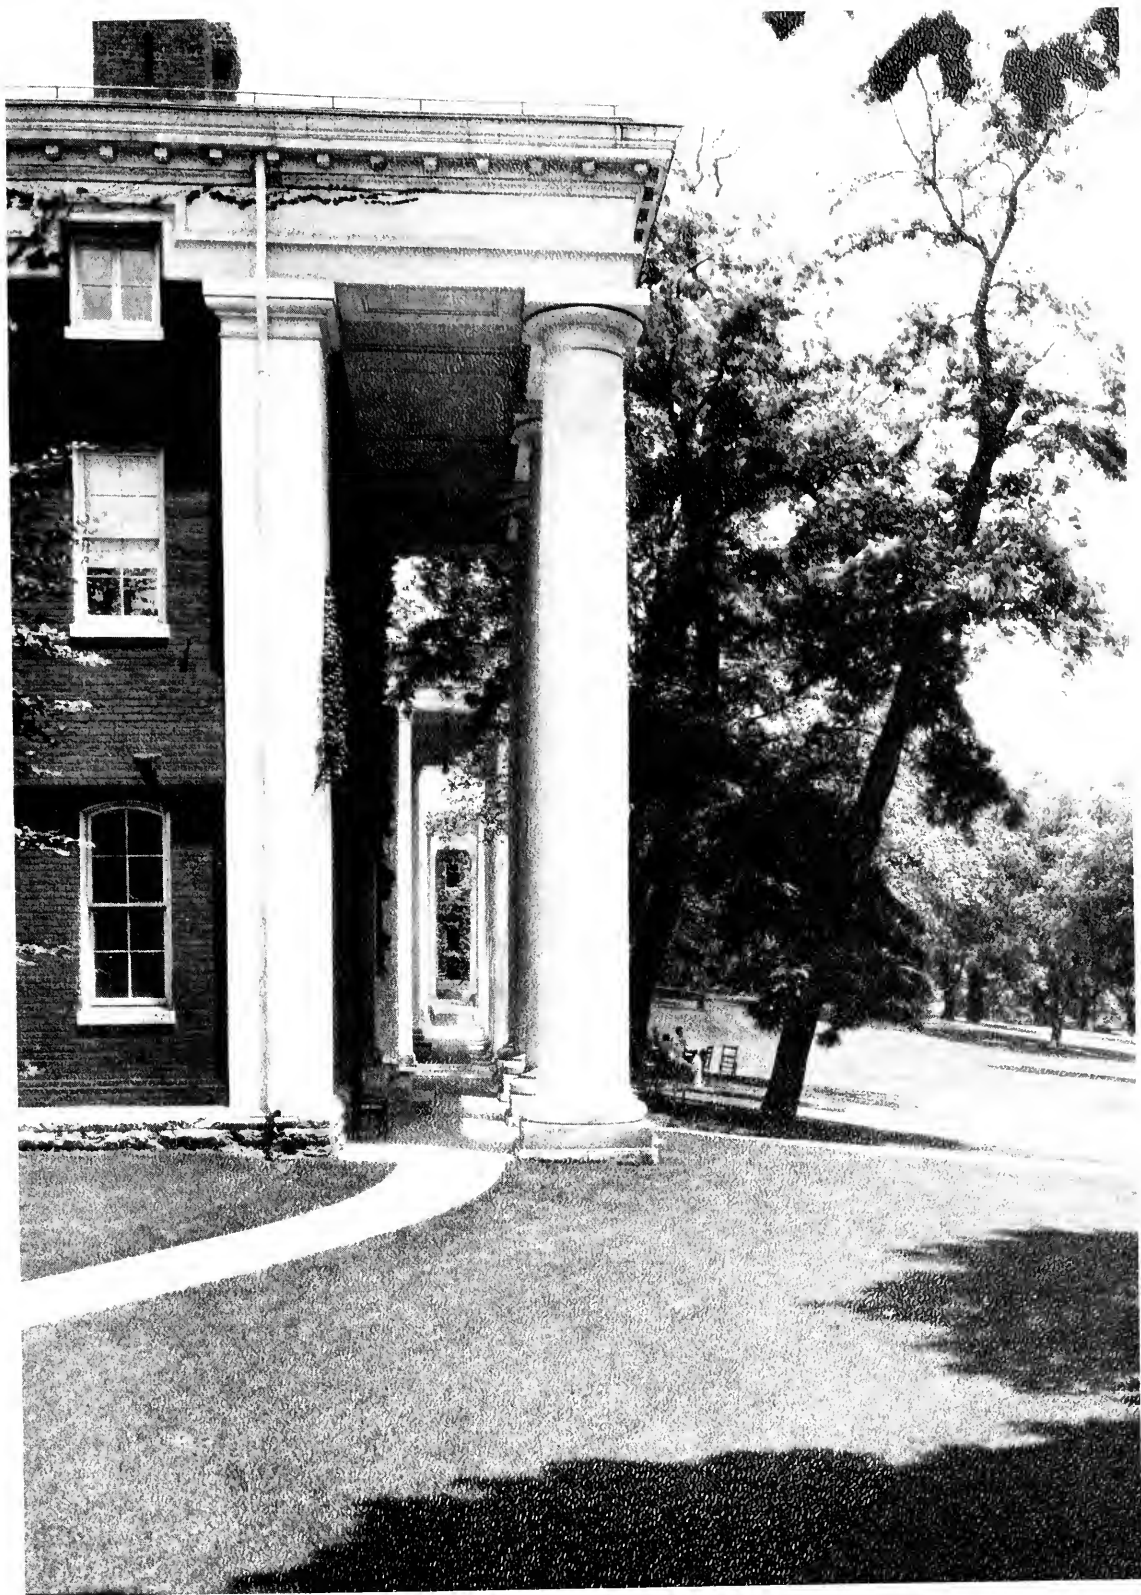

WASHINGTON AND LEE—Here, white columns are as shining monuments to the dauntless spirit of the South.

Where, for five years, General Lee devoted himself to the cause of education, and where, under him, that cause nobly flourished.

LEE CHAPEL.—The last resting place of that hero whose fame is stainless and immortal.

Within and without these columns, history and tradition seem to breathe their legends.

to Truth and Justice.

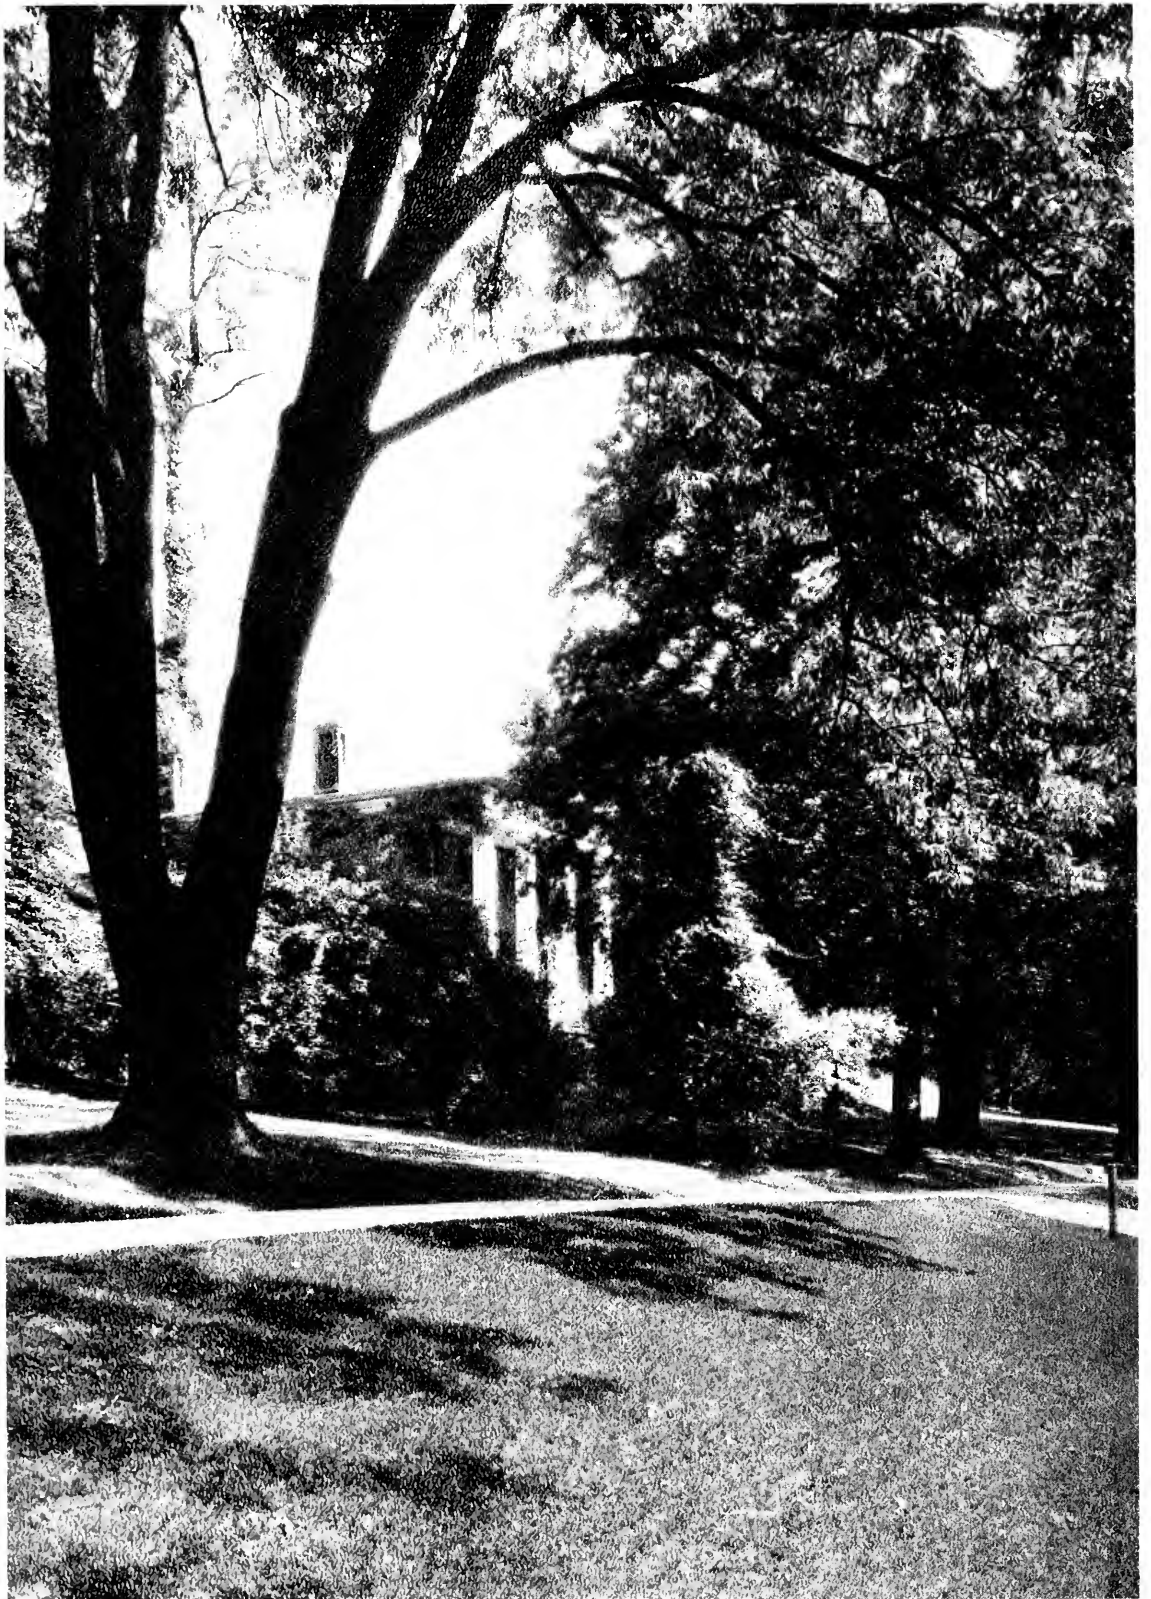

A perfect harmony of man's and nature's art.

Crowning the green slopes of Virginia's hills, embowered in stately trees, stand venerable mansions facing a prospect of imposing beauty.

CARNEGIE LIBRARY—A monument to mental efficiency.

A perfect harmony of human endeavor and natural beauty.

LOVERS' LANE—A touch of beauty that is typically Virginian.

DOREMUS GYMNASIUM—Dedicated to physical development.

*The soldier stepped from the trenches into the furrow ♦♦ and fields that ran red with human blood in April were green with the harvest in June ♦♦♦

Heritage

YOUNG MEN with shattered dreams in their eyes, these young men who came back to their Alma Mater in the stark, bleak days of '65. Their glorious young bodies torn and seared by the wrath of gory war gods—their minds disillusioned by the spectacle of blood they had just witnessed—hearts not yet reconciled to peace—hands not yet attuned to the spirit and task of the reconstruction work ahead of them—a faith boundless and deep in their mother land, but seeing no way out, no paths to the future.

They had remembered this Alma Mater through those hell-torn winter and summer nights of four years. Theirs were memories of an old moon-flooded campus—a campus that lay hushed and peaceful under the elms, a spot of young laughter, of gay voices—memories of purple dusks along silent evening-hushed banks of North River, where ran an old stream down to the Capitol of the South, a river that on those nights of dreaming was a river of red, a river of blood—theirs were memories of spring in Virginia, of March with April coming on, of blue shadows dark against a moon hung high in the night sky—theirs were dreams of beauty, of soft winds, of lilac trees—they desired frail blue flowers and rhododendron blooms, but laurel leaves of sadness were of necessity their lot—bitter tears of memory fell at sunset when day was lost—these springs when old wounds beneath young hearts waked when April lifted up her cup of wistful beauty. They had drunk deep of these things—it was theirs to try to endure and remember not.

They came back to these memories in an autumn when peace was upon the hills in the form of warm gold dreams of youth. Dreams they tried to love by forgetting long red spectral visions that haunted them. Taking up their books with the shadow of a lost cause in their brave young eyes, they marveled that instruments of victory and of accomplishment should no longer be heavy muskets. The end of the road was not in view, but they came back—that thin tide of the valiant young who had laid aside books for the arms of battle, and classrooms for the great bivouacs of war. Their veins hungered for learning, for anything to help rebuild their land. Their eyes saw poetry and power in the future South—the South they must build. With the last tap of rolling drums greater hardships would be theirs—they must love work, they must carry on, accomplish, create. It was the most important thing in life for them, keeping their eyes on the horizon, being lured forward by their beloved land of the future. They slaved, they sang, they loved, they struggled—more than in any battle of those gray, bleak years. And they won.

This, the new South—this, the Washington and Lee of the present—is our heritage from them. This is their victory.

WILTON GARRISON.

Down Where the South Begins

*Down where the sun shines a little brighter,
Down where the heart beats a little lighter,
Where friendship's bonds are a little tighter—
That's where the South begins.*

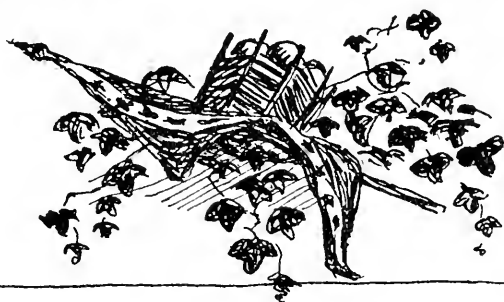

*Down where the banjo strings are strumming,
Down where the honey bee is humming,
Where a hearty welcome awaits your coming—
That's where the South begins.*

When at last he raised his black hands that the shackles might be struck off those + hands were worthy to be taken in loving grasp by every man who knows loyalty and devotion +++

RESUME OF ACTIVITIES

The debating season opened with a debate against the National Union of Students team from England. The question before the house was, Resolved: That co-education is a failure. Washington and Lee upheld the affirmative, and, by a decision of the audience, won a clean-cut victory. Maynard, Platt and Wagner represented the locals.

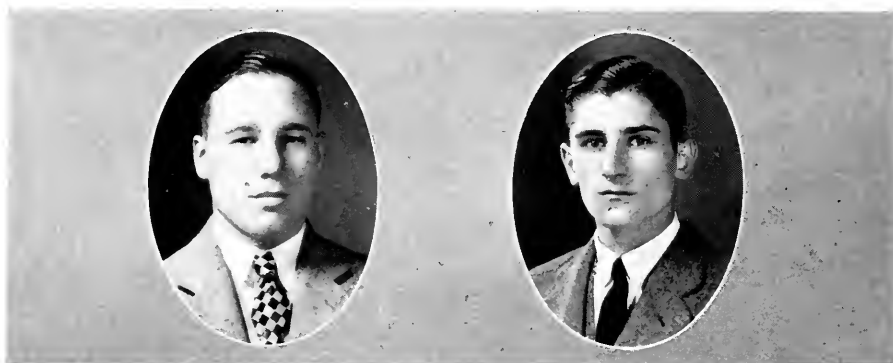

The next debate was the first of its kind in which Washington and Lee had ever participated. It was held in Lynchburg against Randolph-Macon Woman's College. The same subject was used as against the Englishmen, with Washington and Lee upholding the affirmative, but the contestants, Platt and Wagner, lost the decision of the audience.

The debate with the University of Florida team followed, and Washington and Lee upheld the affirmative of the question, Resolved: That the United States should cease to protect by armed force capital invested in foreign lands, except in time of war. Morrow and Sherby won the debate for the affirmative.

The next question was, Resolved: That Alfred E. Smith should be elected President of the United States. The University of Alabama took the negative, with the Lexington team on the opposing side of the argument. A new system of balloting was adopted in this debate, in which the audience voted their opinion before and after the debate, then voting on the merits of the debaters themselves. The negative scored a decisive victory by persuading some of those who were in favor of the motion to change their decision, and in receiving a two to one vote of approval from the audience in having delivered the best arguments. Sanders and Wagner opposed the motion.

The season will close with a Northern trip, on which Washington and Lee will uphold the negative of the resolution that, The Eighteenth Amendment should be repealed, with Johns Hopkins on the opposing side, and by debating against the American University in Washington on the affirmative of the resolution that, The United States should not give armed protection to foreign investments of its citizens. Morrow, Sherby and Wagner will represent Washington and Lee in each of these debates.

To "Mr. Gill," Washington and Lee is indebted for the nation-wide fame and undisputed success of its dances. Having complete charge of all terpsichorean affairs here, Mr. Gill personally supervises the construction and arrangement of decorations, selects color schemes, conceives the themes, and executes all details of the dances. His work has long been recognized as perfect in its field. Perfection it is—artistry and art in the true sense of the word. Washington and Lee is grateful to him for his work, his interest, and his loyalty—all of which make its dances, quoting the New York Times, "the most prominent social affairs in the South."

Class Memorial Bridge

For many years the students, visitors and athletes of Washington and Lee have been forced to descend a slippery and dangerous flight of stairs, cross a railroad track, and then climb a muddy embankment to get to Wilson Field.

Today, due to the efforts of Richard Smith, better known as Captain Dick, there is a beautiful concrete bridge across the cut. Captain Smith arranged for a special University Assembly and explained the project early in the year, and the customary splendid spirit of the student body responded to the extent that Washington and Lee can be proud of another splendid addition to the architectural beauty of the campus buildings.

Today we feel a just pride in the culmination of the efforts of the student body and Captain Dick Smith. Tomorrow, we shall return to our Alma Mater, walk across to Wilson Field to cheer the Fighting Generals to victory. In the center of the span we shall pause, perhaps, and gaze back at the white columns of Doremus Gymnasium, letting wistful eyes follow the line of beautiful old Southern buildings beyond, a panorama of imposing beauty, and remember that ours was the privilege of helping lay the corner stone of this gift to Washington and Lee.

Varsity Football Resume, 1927

Playing a difficult schedule of nine games, the 1927 football team won four, lost four, and tied one, thereby breaking even in the percentage of games won and lost. The Generals defeated Duke, Kentucky, Maryland, and Lynchburg. The Mountaineers of West Virginia were fought to a draw, and Washington and Lee lost to Princeton, Virginia, V. P. I. and Florida.

At the opening of the season, Coach Herron was confronted with the problem of finding men to fill positions left vacant by the graduation of veterans the year before. Not only were these vacancies filled, but a well-balanced team was placed on the field, a team which was a credit to Washington and Lee.

Space will not permit of a detailed summary of individual ability, but we cannot pass without commending the excellent work of Captain Tips, Captain-elect Fitzpatrick, and Spotts. Tips, playing his third year on the varsity, played the best football of his career, and was placed on many mythical honorary elevens. Fitzpatrick was a brilliant performer at all times, and should prove an able leader for the 1928 Generals.

In the backfield, White, Lott, Stearns, and Howe formed a combination at all times hard to stop, and composed a defense almost impregnable.

In the opening game of the season, the Lynchburg Hornets were sent home on the short end of a 25-2 score. The Generals excelled in all departments of the game, and turned in 16 first downs against one for their opponents. The entire backfield gained consistently, and the work of Tips and Fitzpatrick was outstanding on the defense.

On the following Saturday, at Charleston, the Generals held the powerful West Virginia eleven to a 6-6 tie. On three separate occasions the Mountaineer defense stiffened within their ten-yard line and Washington and Lee lost the ball on downs. Spotts and Howe were responsible for many neat gains, while Tips threw the Mountaineer backs for losses time and again.

On October 8, the Duke University Blue Devils were defeated on Wilson Field in one of the most thrilling games of the season. Duke failed to score a first down in the last two periods, while the Generals smashed the opposing defense for sizeable gains throughout the game. Howe and Tips were the individual stars.

The Princeton Tigers handed the Generals a 13-0 set-back at Palmer Stadium, on October 15. The added weight and reserve strength of the Orange and Black proved too much for the Fighting Generals, though Tips and Fitzpatrick threw the fast Wittmer for many losses. Baruch and Wittmer starred for Princeton.

The Play That Brought the Maryland Colors Down

In the first conference game of the season, the Generals flashed a brilliant passing game to defeat the Kentucky Wildcats, 25-0. The combination of Howe and Spotts counted for many long gains via the aerial route, while White and Barnett penetrated the Wildcat line at will. The entire line played a brilliant defensive game.

On October 29, the Big Blue Team journeyed to College Park and defeated Maryland, 13-6. The Generals had a decided edge over the Old Liners in both aerial and ground attacks. White was the individual star of the game, scoring both of the touchdowns for the Blue and White. Tips, Spotts and Fitzpatrick played a wonderful brand of football.

On the following Saturday, the Virginia Cavaliers took advantage of every opportunity to score, and defeated the Generals, 13-7. Virginia was outclassed from start to finish, and only the several lucky breaks of the game enabled them to score. White and Howe were the principal ground gainers for the Blue and White. The defeat was doubly costly, as Tips received injuries which made it impossible for him to play against V. P. I.

On November 12, the V. P. I. Gobblers came out of the game with the long end of a 21-0 score. The brilliant attack of the V. P. I. backfield, with the sensational running of Peake as a special feature, was too much for the Washington and Lee defense. Fitzpatrick played the best game of his career, and was alone responsible for breaking up plays that would have netted the Gobblers long gains.

In the annual Thanksgiving Day game at Jacksonville, Flor'da defeated Washington and Lee, 20-7. The brilliant passing game of the 'Gators was a puzzle the Generals could not solve, and the ability to tighten their defense at the most opportune moment kept the plunges of the Blue and White backs short of the goal line. In this game Spotts, Tips, Stearns, Howe, Fisher, Latham, and Dorsey wore the Blue and White for the last time.

The loss of these veterans will leave many vacancies hard to fill in 1928, but it is hoped that the excellent Freshman eleven will provide material adequate to the occasion.

Spotts Punts Out of Danger

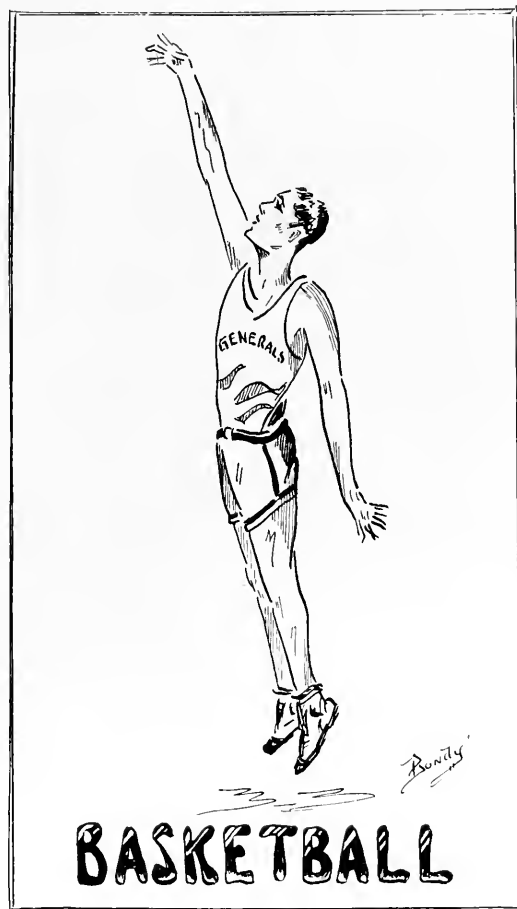

Another year has past, leaving its memories of victory and defeat, of bands playing, of crowds cheering, of picturesque figures struggling in the center of the football battle field. Another Fall approaches when we will hail new heroes, achieve new records, bow down again to the great god of Sport.

In this interval of times, let us give a last word of praise to those veterans whose services to Washington and Lee have been so nobly and unstintingly given. Let us hail Captain Tips and his followers once more. Let us give acclaim and the laurel wreath to our football men who were ever sporting gentlemen, in victory, or in defeat.

It would be hard to give enough credit to Coach Dick Smith for the splendid quintet he produced in 1928. Though the Generals won only five out of sixteen games, the season cannot be declared to be other than successful, since every game played was an exciting battle from start to finish, and the scores were unusually close. The very fact that the Blue and White team scored more total points than their opponents is conclusive proof of this statement.

At the beginning of the season the team invaded the District of Columbia, and were defeated by Maryland, Catholic University, and the Naval Academy on successive nights. The team was greatly handicapped by the absence of Captain Spotts, whose accurate center floor shots accounted for many of the goals secured in other games later in the season.

In the first home game, Bridgewater received the short end of a 49-18 score. The Generals assumed the lead from the start and were never headed. A further handicap was suffered by the team in the loss of Howe, who sustained injuries that kept him out the majority of the season.

WOOD

William and Mary was the next club to invade Lexington, and the Generals defeated them by the score of 49-31. Spotts and Lowry battled for high score honors, while Wood played a splendid game at guard.

Maryland defeated the Blue and White aggregation on January 13, with a 31-28 victory, thus securing a two-game lead on the Generals. Lowry, of the locals, was the individual star of the game with 19 points to his credit. The game was an exciting affair from start to finish, but the uncanny ability of the Old Liners to sink long shots gave them the victory.

On January 21, the Generals downed V. P. I., 35-24. The Blue and White basketballers presented a very strong defense and the Gobblers were able to score but one field goal during the first half. Captain Spotts carried off high point honors for the night.

A week later Alabama nosed out a victory in a game which the visitors won in the last minute of play by one point. The contest was interesting, but was marred by too many fouls. Long shots again served to undo the splendid efforts of the Lexington quintet.

On February 3, Kentucky partially avenged their defeat at the hands of the Generals in football, by annexing 34 to the Generals 28 points. The Blue and White team led during the first half, but the sensational shots and close guarding of the Wildcats brought them victory in the last few minutes of play.

On the following night the Generals again lost, this time by a one point margin to West Virginia. A last minute rally fell a little short of victory, with the brilliant performance of Captain Spotts the outstanding feature of the game.

In a very fast and exceedingly well played game, the Duke Blue Devils took the measure of the Generals, 53-41. The game was marked by the brilliant work of Werber for Duke, and of Spotts and Wood for Washington and Lee.

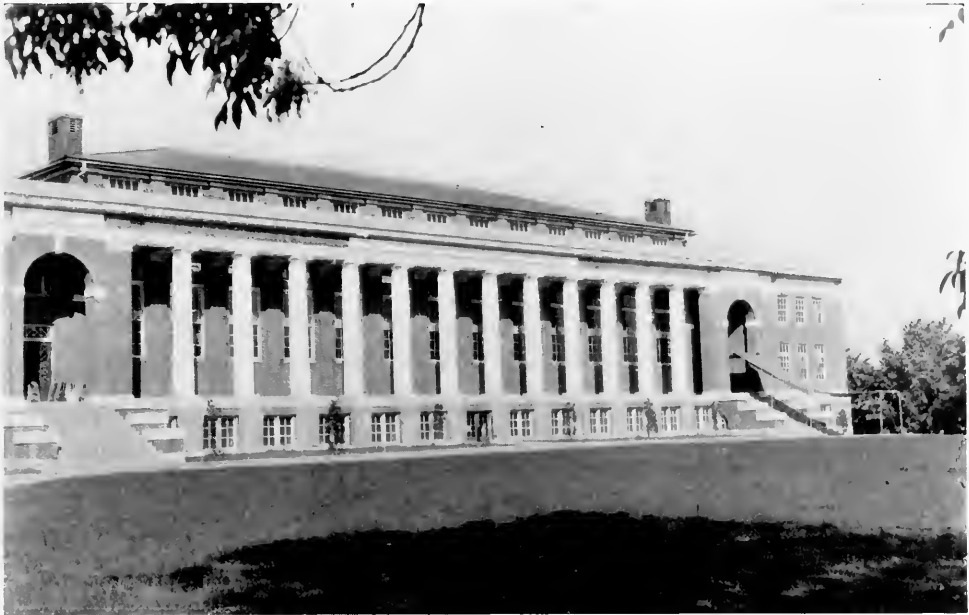

In the second game with V. P. I., on January 11, Spotts ran wild, scoring 22 points to his credit for the Generals, and making the victory the second straight for Washington and Lee.

North Carolina State was the next opponent, and the Wolf Pack staged a last minute rally to score 16 points in rapid succession, gaining a 45-29 victory. The all-round play of Wood featured the game.

The South Carolina Gamecocks nosed out the Generals in another close game on February 16, by a 51-45 score. Spotts and White led in the scoring, while Howe and Wood played excellent defensive games.

Coach Smith's club next turned back Sewanee, 54-30. Several combinations were successfully tried and a substantial lead was run up. Spotts and Eigelback carried off scoring honors.

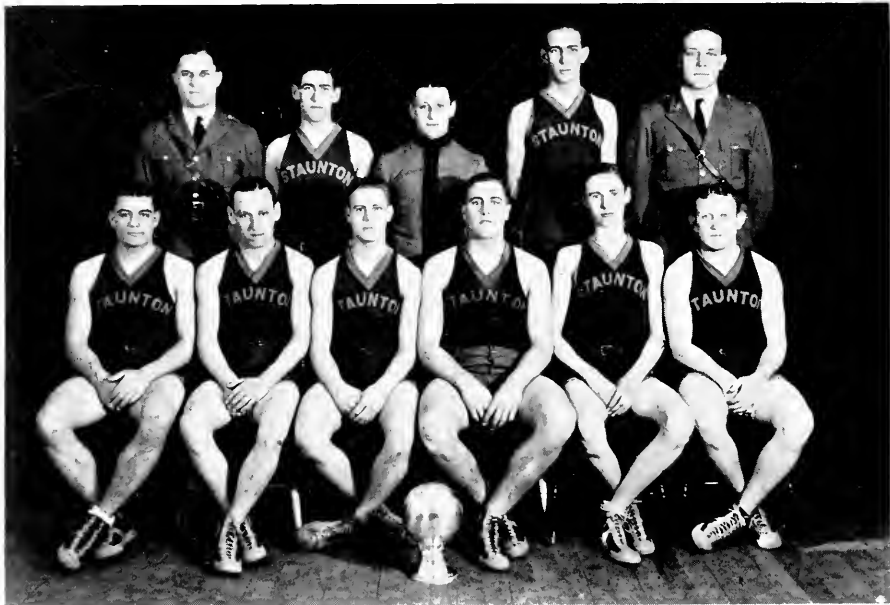

Doremus Gymnasium

In the last regular game on the schedule, Virginia won the state championship from the Generals, 36-28. The game was undecided until the last few minutes of play, when a Virginia rally netted the Cavaliers four baskets. Individual honor for the night belongs to Wood for his brilliant defensive and offensive work.

In the Southern Conference tournament at Atlanta, the Generals were eliminated in the opening round by Mississippi A. & M., one of the strongest teams in the tournament.

Throughout the season the work of Captain Spotts was noteworthy. High point man in almost every game, his loss will be seriously felt next season. The playing of Captain-elect Lowry, Wood, White, Eigelbach, Groop, Joynes, and Howe, was most commendable, and with an undefeated Freshman team to pick from, prospects for 1929 are particularly bright.

Fifth Annual Scholastic Basketball Tournament

The Fifth Annual Scholastic Basketball Tournament was held in Doremus Gymnasium March 1st, 2nd and 3rd. This tournament has grown to be one of the leading events of its kind in the East, and its winners are generally conceded to be the champions of preparatory and high schools in the South Atlantic States.

Twenty-two of the leading preparatory and high schools of the South Atlantic States and the District of Columbia competed for the 1928 title. This is the largest number of entries in the history of the tourney. Staunton Military Academy won the championship this year, being the second in which this academy has been victorious, as it was champion in 1925.

After having put out John Marshall High School, last year's winners, in the semi-finals, 46-41, the Staunton team defeated Bingham Military Academy in the final contest, 19-16.

Tournament awards were made by President Henry Louis Smith at the informal dance which followed the game. The winners of the tournament received an actual size silver basketball, while the runners-up were presented with a wall plaque. Sherman, of John Marshall, was awarded the bronze statuette for the best all-around man to the tournament. Adams of John Marshall, was given the high score cup.

1927 Baseball Resume

Brilliant wins and unexpected losses marked the 1927 baseball season. During the season the Generals won eight and lost seven games; defeating such strong teams as Georgia Tech, Duke, Cornell, Syracuse, and Virginia, but failing to come through against V. P. I., and other state teams when victories meant championship claims.

The team was composed largely of veterans, and at times seemed to be an unbeatable combination, playing brilliant ball worthy of professional circles. The work of Captain Palmer, Spotts, and Captain-elect Folliard was especially noteworthy. Spotts led in hitting with 19 hits in 59 times at bat, for an average of .322. Jones hit above the three hundred mark. Spotts, Rauber, Palmer, and Gwaltney were leading run-getters.

Springfield College was met on Wilson Field in the curtain-raiser. White, Maben, and Folliard took turns on the mound, but the weather was so cold that their pitching could not be effective and Springfield won 4-1. Lowden hit a home run to account for the Generals' only tally.

GWALTNEY

LOWDON

A six-day invasion of the South was opened at Atlanta on March 28th and 29th, with two games against Georgia Tech. In the first game Washington and Lee errors enabled Georgia Tech to come out on the long end of a 6-3 score, but on the following day the Generals showed a complete reversal of form and clinched a spectacular game by scoring two runs in the ninth inning. A feature of the game was the masterful pitching of Maben, who allowed only three scattered hits.

The two games scheduled with the University of South Carolina were rained out, and on Friday and Saturday of the same week, Duke was defeated in two games by the scores of 9-6, and 6-4. There games were featured by the hard hitting of the Generals, Spotts, Rauber, and Tips getting home runs.

On April 6th, Cornell was defeated 3-2 on Wilson Field in the best played game of the year. Folliard allowed only three hits and received perfect support. Palmer and Rauber led in the hitting.

Folliard Cuts the Corner for the Third Strike

On April 16th, Syracuse was taken into camp on the home field by a score of 6-5. The game was an exciting eleven inning affair, with Maben and Folliard hurling. Palmer and Lowden had excellent days at bat.

On April 25th, Virginia, ancient rival of the Generals, invaded Lexington, to be turned back by the score of 8-0. Folliard yielded only six scattered hits, and Stearns, Gwaltney, Palmer and White connected with two safeties each.

Displaying a marked tendency to err, the Generals lost the next game to Richmond 8-1. McCrary of the visitors pitched an excellent game, but the majority of Richmond's runs were unearned.

The Generals journeyed to Blacksburg for the first game with V. P. I. This resulted in a pitchers' battle between Folliard and Bond, with V. P. I. the victor by a 2-1 score. Only four hits were gathered off each pitcher.

O-U-T! The Camera Doesn't Lie

In the first of a series of three home games, the Generals came from behind to defeat St. John's 4-2. The feature of the game was the pitching of Folliard, who struck out nine men, in the four and one-half innings he was on the mound. The Quantico Marines were the next visitors to Wilson Field and defeated the Generals 6-3. Spectacular catches by Stearns prevented a larger score. In the last of the series, Virginia Medical College was the victim of air-tight pitching, hard hitting, and an 8-0 score. Osterman held the visitors to three hits.

The Generals journeyed to Charlottesville for the second tilt with Virginia, and in a weird game, marked by heavy hitting and erratic fielding, lost to the "Wahoos," 9-8.

In the final game of the season, the Generals were able to gather only two hits off Bond, and V. P. I. won 4-0. Folliard pitched well, and the team played air-tight ball, but they were unable to score.

1927 Track Resume

Although individual brilliancy characterized every race, the Generals were able to win only one of five dual meets, due mainly to inability to score in field events. The schedule was a difficult one, and loss of veterans of the year before, forced the team to work under a handicap.

Chief among the brilliant performers on the team were Captain Milbank, Captain-elect Reardon, Coleman, and Wilson. Milbank starred in the dashes, and was seldom headed in either the hundred or two-twenty. Reardon displayed marked versatility in the hurdles, broad-jump, and javelin throw, and led in individual scoring for the season. Coleman's specialty was the javelin throw, and he lead the field in this event in every meet in which he participated. Wilson was consistently able to lead his opponents to the tape in the four-forty.

In the first meet of the season, held on Wilson Field, the Generals were defeated by Duke University, 75-51. Reardon carried off high point honors for the day, taking two first places, and one second place. In a most spectacular race, Wilson came from behind to win the quarter mile. Milbank won the 220-yard dash, and took second place in the 100. Patterson annexed first place in the low hurdles.

The meet scheduled with North Carolina State was rained out after the Generals had made the trip to Raleigh, but the team returned to Lexington to win from William and Mary, 69-57, on April 16th. The Blue and White trackmen captured nine first places in this meet, never losing the lead in the scoring. Milbank won both dashes, and Wilson finished the 440 ahead of the field in fast time. Coleman hurled the javelin 171 feet, 8 inches, to take first place.

On April 26th, the University of Richmond defeated Coach Fletcher's charges on Wilson Field in a close and exciting meet. Reardon was high score man for the day, annexing thirteen points. He took first place in the high hurdles, and second places in both the broad jump and the javelin throw. The brilliant performance of Thorpe for Richmond forced Wilson into second place in both the half and quarter mile races.

On May 3rd, V. P. I. defeated the Generals on Wilson Field in the most interesting meet of the season, by the score of 71-55. Coleman hurled the javelin 179 feet, 2 inches, to break the school record and take first place. Captain Montague of V. P. I. led Milbank to the finish line in the 100 yard dash, but Milbank reversed the order in the 220. Reardon again led in individual scoring with a total of thirteen points to his credit. Wilson lost the winner's place in the 440 by a close decision.

In Richmond, on May 16th, the Generals entered the South Atlantic championship meet, annexing thirteen points. Reardon was injured at the beginning of the meet and was unable to compete. Coleman took first place in the javelin throw. Sproul, Milbank, and Nance were the other point winners. In the two-mile event, Nance ran the best race of his career.

Very few men were lost at the end of the season, and the remaining veterans, supplemented by the Frosh squad of 1927, should offer Coach Fletcher with an abundance of material from which to select a winning team in 1928.

Wrestling, 1928

The record of one victory in eight starts is not a very impressive one for the Blue and White mat men. However, though alibis are not ever in order, the lack of seasoned material and illness were important factors in the defeat.

In the first meet of the season, the Richmond Y. M. C. A. defeated the Generals in a close and exciting meet, by the score of 18-15.

V. P. I. was the next opponent, and Hughes and Tully were the only members of the Blue and White squad who were able to win their matches against the study Techmen.

In the next meet North Carolina State defeated Washington and Lee, 16-13, in a contest that was brim full of thrills and close decisions.

Following this meet, the team journeyed to Charlottesville, where the Virginia mat men were taken into camp by the score of 19½-7½. Gresham, Davis, Seligman, and Hughes won their matches, while Madison forced the Virginia captain to a draw.

Davidson and Duke defeated the Generals in their last home matches of the season, while on the Northern trip Princeton and Franklin and Marshall were the victors by decisive scores.

RESUME

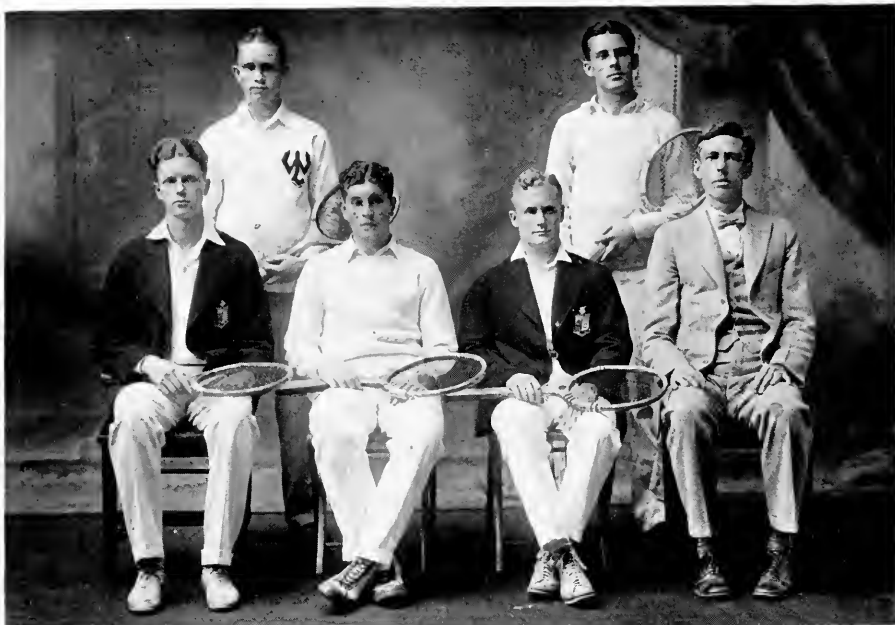

Under the able leadership of Captain George Lanier, the 1928 Golf Team added new laurels to the athletic achievements of Washington and Lee.

On April 7th, the Generals journeyed to Davidson, where they were defeated by the score of 15-13. Though handicapped by the illness of Mabry, the locals played brilliant golf, forcing their opponents to the last hole of play. Eichholtz was the individual star of the afternoon. At every green his approach shot was dead to the pin, and it seemed that he putted with uncanny accuracy. The smashing drives of Lanier, the long iron approaches of Cooke, and the perfect pitch shots of Chandler showed the boys to be far up in the amateur class.

At Duke, on April 9th, the Generals rallied to trounce the Blue Devils, 12-5. Lanier carried off high point honors for the day, assessing a total of 6 points, while the exceptionally long drives of Chandler, and the perfect approach shots of Mabry won considerable applause from the gallery. Eichholtz ended the day with four birdies to his credit.

On April 10th, the Blue and White dropped the last game to North Carolina, 7-4. Eichholtz alone seemed able to keep up the pace begun by the club, though the game was brightened at intervals by the brilliant recoveries of Chandler and Lanier. On the last green the 40-foot putt of Chandler rimmed the cup, forcing him to a par with the loss of the hole to an opponent's birdie.

Joyless and Messitup

A Romance

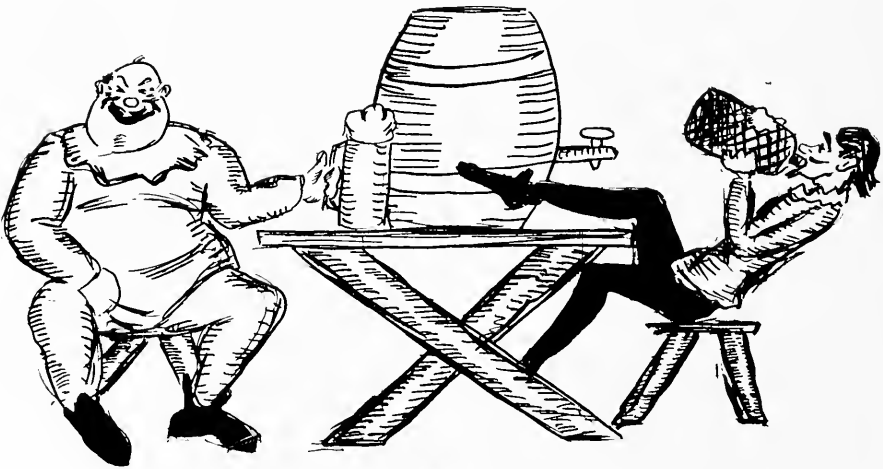

IN

A LOT OF PARTES

BEING THE TALE OF TWO GOODLY KNIGHTES WHO DID SET FORTHE IN SEARCH OF ADVENTURE, AND OF HOW THEY DID FINDE IT, AND OF THE MANY THINGS THAT HAPPENNEDE ALSO.

THE FIRST PARTE

Now it was the time of the Holly Berry and the Mistletoe, when every good knight did gird himself for the Yuletide Feast, and did make much of wining and feasting and wenching, and of the joys of the white sheets; and there was much of merriment and of making sheep's eyes among the young people of the countryside. And so it came to pass that while the good Santa Clauses of the Salvation Army were intriguing of the people much gold of the baser sort, and while the merchants of the boroughs were preaching to the people of goodly Christmas cheer and early shopping: while the men of the North did come to town with their wares of corn, and the farmers of the South with their rye and barley, to exchange for the things of their sustenance. So there came to the town of joy and laughter, called London, two goodly knights well met. And it seemed that one was called Joyless, for that he did never smile or see good in anything—albeit he had been christened by his parent folk, Matt, but so doleful had he been that they did needs perforce call him thus by Joyless, and by that he was known to his death. And this good knight had neither heart nor hair, having lost one and never had the other; and he did ride a horse of the name Buick, which was the son of Cadillac by Chevrolet. And this knight did look with ill grace on the carnival spirit of the town, and he was heard to say that it was not good that people should be so content; for had not he himself once laughed and suffered for his sin by having the great pain in his side?

Now with this goodly knight called Joyless there was one of lesser rank, and perforce of younger years and fewer merits, who, of late, had been called Messitup, though blessed in christenhood with the name of Clyde. Like his older friend, this squire smiled little, and his mouth perforce was twisted to a degree far from its natural wont by reason of continued sneering and jeering. Yet he was of goodly stature and fair of hair and limb, though it was whispered that at times he wore a mask lest the young maidens be affrighted at his approach. In years though few, he was in experience full plentifully supplied, and it was said that he had even played at Under the Table, a game usually reserved for only the older knights and gentlemen.

Now these two knights were boon companions, and their fame at shocking the corn, tipping the rye, sucking the wine, lifting the heels, tripping the skirt, tossing the cow, flipping the lass, running the gauntlet, at playing at love, at playing at cards, at playing at Sucking In, at playing at Roast the Other, at playing at Double Cross Everyone, at playing at this and that and the other, had spread throughout the country. And they were great at running, skipping, jumping, jostling, shining, shooting, shouting, looping, and hog-tying the Royal Stag. They were great at conniving, and they did connive with tramps, truants, and trustys, dolts and dottards, rums and runts. They were drunk, sober, good, bad, indifferent, lusting, hating, loving, leaving, coming, going, fighting, and drinking all the days of their lives.

Now there was a miller in London and this miller did keep a tavern of good repute. Of his beer was no peer to be found in all the town, and it was said such wenches were there as never were seen since the immortal string of Troy. His schooners were the best sailors, and it was known that on but six of them a man might ride the seven seas, which was going somebody one better—though who it was nobody knew. Of sawdust he had the best, and a bar so long that from end to end it measured 606303404101 cubits, and of breadth it was twice around the miller's middle, which was 38574639 cubits in itself. And when at the hour of nine of the evening, when the knights came to sup and enjoy his good cheer, along at the bar at each place was set a well filled ship, of which the sight was as of the drawing up in single file of all the armies of the world, and the quantity thereof of the beer was near to 57463896 thousands of gallons.

Now this miller had a daughter who was the fairest and most sought after of all the maids in the town. And all the counts, no-accounts, counters, and discounters who came to the miller's to drink beer, stayed to gaze at his beautiful daughter and to woo her and wish her for himself. But this daughter of the miller would have none of any man, and did send them all away with a laugh and a smile and a rift in their hearts; for of all the fair ladies in London town she was at that time most comely. So the miller found that at all times his place was cluttered with knights and squires of little worth and less intelligence, and all of them wished his daughter and drank his beer and soaked up his heat and wished him luck and told him stories and laughed and sang and talked and joked and played cards and proposed toasts to the miller's daughter.

In the time of the Holly Berry there was of course great feasting and drinking, and the place of the miller was sore taxed to hold the great number of lords and ladies who crowded its great length and breadth, for in London town there was no greater hall than his; and yet there was scarce room for the multitude that gathered there. And until the hour of supping the miller had dolled to his patrons the sum of 4536867485 thousands of gallons of beer, and had himself twice called that there be a potion served to all at his expense, and this was thought to be of 564783 gallons itself, and of the beer which was spilled and expectorated and tossed upwards for want of room in its drinker's belly, there was no count kept.

So now in the late hours of the day when the sun had hid himself behind the waving crest of Nell Gwyn's hat and the Great Catherine's reputation, the wandering knights called Joyless and Messitup rode down the streets of London town and came to the door of the miller's tavern.

"What'll ye have?" cried blousy Ben, for that was the tender's name.

"A cup of cheer, in the shape of a beer," our good knight Joyless said.

"Where are ye from?" said blousy Ben, as he poured the liquor forth.

"What do ye care?" said Messitup as he tossed it down his throat.

"A plague for ye," said blousy Ben, as he filled another glass.

"Bring us a wench," said Messitup, "a comely, pretty lass."

"That I will," said blousy Ben, "and one who'll hold ye fast."

And being of a low and mean and devilish turn of mind by reason of a perverse and perverted nature, this same blousy Ben did call unto him the gay daughter of the miller, and did entreat of her that she go to Joyless and Messitup and properly humiliate them with her quips and sharp words when they began their advances.

Now this daughter of the miller was at the same time called Queenie, through being so like the great Russian Queen, and when she did look in the direction of our two good knights she perceived that the one of them was comely and good to look upon. Now this one was by chance Messitup, for that wily youth had donned his mask, whereas Joyless, being possessed of an hallucination that he was in himself handsome, remained as he was and suffered greatly thereby. So that Queenie, telling blousy Ben that she would set these impudent strangers in their place, advanced and seated herself at their table, which they had secured by the power of their scowls and the size of their swords.

Now these two knights had long been afasting for the company of women-kind, and they were both in great thirst for the kisses and caresses of a goodly wench. It being that both desired Queenie greatly, they plied her with beer and sweets and dainties, but were unable to stir her from her position of neutrality; for though they purchased pickles, prunes, pears, parsnips, persimmons, periwinkles, and pretzels; though they bought her cheese and chestnuts, chicken and chili-con, they could not budge her from her position of equal grace to both. So that at last it dissolved into a duel of flatteries; and they did lavish on her honeyed words and extraordinary phrases in order that she might perceive that one had the greater intellect or the greater imagination, or the greater judgment of beauty. And Joyless called her sleek, lusty, impoudred, renowned, virile, well-set, jolly and lively. And Messitup termed her polished, appetizing, affable, palpable, subtle and tingling. But Joyless declared her exquisite, trim, agreeable, plump, sparkling, pretty and aromatizing. Yet Messitup would have her trixy, nimble, fine, soft, quaint, and affectionate. And Joyless, being unable to recall any further adjectives, was pained to see her take seat upon the knee of Messitup and privily turn her pretty lips to him to be kissed. Then Joyless in great anger began to drink much beer; and the greatness of his drinking was sufficient to keep eight little boys running from his table to the bar all the time, and the noise of his drinking and gulping could be heard for miles around. And when he had taken upwards of ten thousand pints of the stuff his rage against Messitup became very great, and he began to scold and denounce him in scurrilous language.

Joyless roared forth in his mighty voice and called Messitup a spotted, lascivious, gluttonous, odiferous, senseless, distempered, and stupid fool. And when the vileness of the names had sunk into the far away brain of Messitup he was greatly angered, and called Joyless louting, surfeited, forlorn, worm-eaten, miserable, withered, defective, putrified, scurvy, and a weak-kneed donkey. And it came to pass that at these words the wrath of Joyless broke loose, and he shouted that he would expose this foul deceiver who attempted seduction so openly. And reaching across the table he tore the mask off the face of Messitup, revealing the ugly features underneath. Then the two fell to kicking and biting, jumping and spitting, ripping and tearing and swearing, and they did fair bid to tear the foundations of the place from their moorings, so that the miller was forced to come to the scene and thrust his great size between the combatants and stop the battle. Then the miller perceived that the brawl was because of his daughter, and though it pleased him that men should fight for her, it pleased him not that two such scurvy knights should contend for her hand.

So he did therefore fix the culprits with a fiery eye, and shaking his great finger under their noses did call them unhandsome, unseemly, naughty, wormy, bald, and stupid. And the two culprits then in unison berated their host, calling him bemealed, bescabbed, corrupt, besmeared, gaunt, scraggy, and misused.

At this the miller was in great perplexity, insofar as his oratory had been outdone, and seeing also that many of his tankards, and chairs and tables had been destroyed and ill-used, he forthwith shook them most heartily and cracked their heads together. Then Joyless drew his sword and cut at the miller's hand, and immediately there was a great shouting and flashing of weapons and ere the miller himself was able to summon Scotland Yard, or Willie Burns, or Chief Swink, the place was in bedlam and blood flowed as freely as had the beer before. And after a great time the house was cleared and it was discovered that both Joyless and Messitup, at the first stroke of battle, had taken to the lower confines of a stout table, and had thereby escaped all browbeating and swordswiping. But in effect they were none the better off, for the eagle eye of the great Chief Swink was not to be eluded and he and the miller, when the rest had gone, dragged from their lair the two progenitors of the riot, and forthwith despatched them to the King to be tried and sentenced according to the laws of the time, which were the great and noble rules of the Marquis of Queensbury.

And as the bow-legged prisoners were marched before the King the court arose, exclaiming:

"What manner of men are these who wear their pants in parenthesis?"

"What is the charge?" quoth the King.

And the miller told him and he was greatly wroth, and cried out, saying:

"Is it possible that the beautiful Queenie prefers the ribald movements of these two swine to the royal and dignified gestures of the mighty King? Kill the wretches!"

But the prisoners pled well for mercy, and the King being of soft heart and head did at last change his judgment to this as is about to follow.

"I sentence you two knights to bring me the man in all the world most fit to be called the Student Representative of Washington and Lee."

Then there was great weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth, for the knights knew there was none more outstanding in all the world than Messitup himself, and yet the King would not allow his claim, and therefore they must set forth in search of some other man, and he a most gallant man yclept City Point Simmons, yet of his whereabouts they knew not, nor why, nor what nor when nor how they could find, distinguish, come upon, discover or otherwise know of his whereabouts.

Yet it was the decree of the King that in one year they were to bring a man who would pass the test, and in all the world they knew that only City Point Simmons could pass, and so they must set forth in search of him.

YE SECOND PARTE

So it came to pass that on a morning known as New Year's Day, and that because on this day had begun the new calendar and the new circle of feasts and holidays, these two goodly knights set forth to find their man, and also to save their lives. And in the second part shall be told of the many adventures which befell them, how they met the man who laughed so queerly, how they met the man who talked so queerly, how they met the man who acted so queerly, and how they met the people who lived so queerly, and of many other strange and ungodly things.

Now they had ridden many miles from London town, and had passed in the going upward of an hundred miles, searching and inquiring of all they met of the whereabouts of this same Simmons, but none, it seemed, had ever seen or heard of any such person in that country. So they continued to ride along, and it chanced one day that they came to a school master who was teaching his pupils the history of the world, and well he might, he being old enough. And Joyless and Messitup, stopping to observe him in his work and to inquire of him concerning this same Simmons, perceived that he was a queer fellow, and that he also wore upon his cape the crest of the miller, on whose daughter's account they had ridden forth on this quest. And they were minded to inquire of him how he had come to the connected with the miller, but wisely decided to hold their tongues. And as they sat there this scholar called his pupils to order, and as he went over the roll-call he was heard to chuckle much to himself in a queer and strange way.

"Mr. Moss," he called.

There was no answer.

"Mr. Moss is absent," quoth he. "Mr. Moss gets a zero, heh, heh, heh." And so it was that an unvisited virgin lost because he was not present.

"Mr. Smith," he called, and was answered. "Mr. Smith, have you read the assignment?"

"Egad, I have not," quoth he called Smith, and again came the cackling chuckle, "Heh, heh, heh, Mr. Smith gets a zero."

And so the long roll went, and many were called but few prepared, and from him who had not was taken away, and to him who had was given more, even unto the fourth generation.

But at last the scholar had finished his task, and he turned on his visitors a shrewd, keen glance, asking what it was they sought of him. When they told him their mission he was much amazed, and after a great while he answered that him they sought had of late been by there, but months ago, and had departed to the highlands in the North, as he feared the cities lest they seduce him from his hypocritical mode of living.

So the two kept on, and night found them far from the town and deep in the forest whence they had gone to escape the noonday heat. And the air was become cold and damp, which discomfort was added to the fact that they had no food nor whiskey to sustain them. And it seemed a long time that they rode, until a long way off they perceived two lights, side by side, toward which they rode in great haste.

And when they had come to these two lights they perceived them to be from two poor cabins, and over the door of one was the sign, "Arcades," and over the other was the sign, "Lambda Chi." Here they found a poor people, ignorant and ill provided for in all worldly knowledge, yet withall very good and hospitable. And they chose the "Arcades" for their lodging, for it had less of the stable about it, and was perceived to have two candles for light, whereas the other had but one. Nor were there any women about the place, nor had there ever been any there, though some few of the inhabitants insisted that there had been in the past, but they were judged to be flighty and apt to err.

And when the morning was come they thanked their hosts and went on their way, but were forced to eat of the bark and roots of trees, else they should starve, so scanty had been their breakfast. And as they rode along in the beautiful morning sunlight they saw many and wonderful things, and the beauties of Nature were revealed to them as was never privileged to man to view before. And they did see a field of lilies waving in the breeze and beautiful to behold, and they observed that about this field was a fence having on it a sign which did read, "Betas, Keep Out." And although they longed to pluck a fair lily for their pretty iron buttonholes, they were unable to fathom the fence, and so continued on their way.

And later they saw a bull-pen, which pen had a sign over it saying, "Phi Kappa Sig," and Joyless remarked on the beauty of the bulls, Messitup agreeing that they were handsome of body, and withal as dumb of mind as they were handsome of physique: and in this manner they were like to a field of horses he had once seen in High-hat Land, which horses were of beautiful stature and body, but so dumb were they that it was a legend they had let the fire which kept their life's blood warm in winter, die out, and these beasts were called "Phi Psis."

Then Joyless told of a time when he had travelled in the land of Lowdown, and he had seen a hut of indescribable squalor, and a queer sort of animal which neither knew or cared what it did, and these animals were the lowest in all of life's scale, and they were called, "squeedunks." Then Messitup told of the time he had travelled in the land of Fools, and there he had seen a company of animals, who, the whole day long flitted to and fro, jumping and running and dancing and fooling, and making great sport of playing with the females, and these animals, because they had no sense and never went any place, though they thought they did, were called Sigma Chi's. Then Joyless told of the queerest kind of beings who dwelt on the edge of the civilized world, and they were in ignorance of all the world, but seemed to be happy, for they knew not that they knew not, and so cared not that we knew that they knew not, and so were called, "S. P. E's." And Messitup told of the time he had travelled in the land of Ruin and Ravel and there in a dissolute part of a dissolute country he had found a house. This house was built of boards well soaked in rum, and about it fountains of rum were playing, and within the faucets of water was rum instead, and the floors were rum-colored, and the furniture and dishes were of the hue of rum, and those there had vermillion stained noses, and were beady and watery of eye, and were all the time possessed of a great thirst and did attempt to quench it with rum, and these people were called, "S. A. E's." And finally Joyless told of having travelled in the land of the Roughnecks, in which land he had found a palace built of marble and straw, and the king of these people and this land had a head also of rough marble, and his brains were of straw, and the heads of all his subjects were of hewn stone and all their brains were of straw, and they ate stone food, and did drink bad wine flavored with straw and were held in the eyes of civilized people to be an ignorant and illiterate lot. And how, in this same country, and back of this same stone palace, was a hovel, and living therein were a strange specie of animals who were wont to drink a beverage known as "corn," and that this concoction served to incense their already brutish dispositions to make it that they would once each week destroy their hovel, and would perforce be forced to rebuild it that they might tear it up again. And those that lived in the palace were called, "Phi Gams," whilst that same specie of animals was known as "P. K. A's."

Thus they passed the time away with anecdotes, and at last came to a large house which they believed to be a castle, but on coming closer found to be an asylum, and though they had little stomach for the company of the insane, they were forced to enter and seek shelter against the elements.

YE THIRDE PARTE

Now within this asylum they found themselves well-received by the keeper, a kind and well instructed old man called Tolerance by name, and he washed and fed and clothed them, and cheered them with wine and anecdotes, as he was sore put for the company of good men and sound. And after they had been warmed and fed and filled with the good wine of the keeper he conducted them through his house and showed them his charges, and they were indeed a strange and motely lot.

And first there was a gray-haired patriarch who stood on his bed and made speeches, and ever he preached against sin and wickedness, having known the joys of neither, and his was a sad case, for he was incurable. Then they saw the queerest of all sights, for there was a man almost bald, with a strange accent, and with him was a young man, and the old man tortured the young man continually with questions, yet the young one only laughed as he knew not of his pain.

And sometimes, the keeper said, he would rush to the bars of his cell in a great rage, and shake them with all his might and challenge everyone to fisticuffs.

So they left him and went to the next cell, and here saw the saddest of cases: for here was a young man working all day and night on a crown for himself, and he spared not his honor and cleanliness to gather material for it, and they saw him upon the floor searching for bits to brighten it with, and the warden said this young man would be all the more insane when he became disillusioned of his crown by discovering it to be of brass and not of gold as he thought it to be. And next to him sat another young man, and all day he played with a toy faucet which spilled forth rum, and he did wallow and bathe in it and have eyes for nothing else, and the keeper said this was young Sir Godwain, who was disappointed of a love affair, and had become childish therefrom.

So they went through all the great house, and many and strange were the things they saw there, and sad indeed were they to view them.

YE FOURTHE PARTE

Being well rested in the morning, and well stocked with food by the keeper, they set forth again on their quest, but they had not gone many miles before they met a man who had seen him whom they sought, and he told them of the school not far from there which was kept by a queer scholar, and for his students he had queer young men; for albeit they were good students and worked hard they did never partake of wining and wenching, nor were they ever heard to laugh or tell a joke. And the knights forthwith asked the name of the school, and were told that it was called the College of Intellectual Eunuchs.

So then they spurred their horses, for they felt near to the end of their quest, and ere the sun had half passed its daily journey, they came to a small cabin in a clearing, and herein they found the object of their search, studying diligently. And the knights observed that these were indeed strange people, for they seemed unconscious of all but books, and among them they observed two of the tribes of people who had quartered them on their first knight, and one of them was of the tribe of Arcades, known by the name of Davis; and the other was of the tribe of Lambda Chi, called Dix. But of the teacher they found themselves most greatly amazed, for he was a well known and notorious criminal, who had once made a fortune from innocent students, so Joyless said, by forcing them to buy a book which he had written. There was, quoth Joyless, a price on his head, and he began drawing his sword for making him prisoner. But City Point, whom they had come to find, begged so hard for his life that at last they relented, and decided to wait and catch him at some more opportune time.

Then they set forth on the return journey to the king, and at the college there was much weeping and wailing and gnashing of teeth at the loss of so beloved a brother.

So the quest of Joyless and Messitup ended, and so endeth this tale, for of those things that follow we have nothing to do, and our task is herewith ended.

HISTORICAL NOTE

For the benefit of the reader it may be well to add that the miller's daughter was happily married to the King's fool, and that from that happy union came twelve jesters, now recognized to be the most famous the world has ever known. The miller took his Benedictine too seriously and was early laid away, while Joyless and Messitup met a most pleasant death in the huge harem of Prince Kagevf Modftu Sallagsxz in Ancient India.

The End of The Rover Boys

Daniel and Thomas Rover entered Washington College (now Washington and Lee University) in 1837. The boys were twins, but were very different in temperament. Thomas was an exercise hound and earned his letter in every sport that the College offered. He especially excelled at "suicide," and was noted around the countryside for his frequent afternoon hikes to House Mountain. His motto was "a sound mind in a sound body," with the emphasis on the body. Daniel laughed at his brother's activities and was never in the gym except at the dances. He was known to drink of the cup that cheers, and was also addicted to the tobacco habit. Daniel's hobby was studying about eight hours a day. He was a member of Phi Beta Kappa back in the days when it was not considered ungentlemanly to drink. When the boys were graduated, each followed his inclination—Thomas returning to the old farm, and Daniel going to the city in search of a job. As time went on Daniel achieved fame as a subway construction engineer, and he incidentally accumulated a fortune. Thomas continued to live on the old farm. He delighted in doing all of his ploughing, harvesting, repairing and wood cutting. No hands except his own touched the teats of his forty milch cows. Once he visited his brother in the city, but he did not enjoy the life of luxury to which Daniel had become accustomed. He complained of having to wait until 7:30 for his breakfast, and of riding every block in a limousine. Each of the men prospered in his respective environment, and by a coincidence, when they were approaching ninety-three years of age, both Daniel and Thomas were stricken with the flu. Daniel fought on bravely but finally succumbed after four weeks' illness. Due to Thomas' low state at the time, he was not informed of his brother's death. After a five weeks' siege Thomas was able to sit up once more. His only companion, his sixty-six-year-old daughter, Mary, decided to inform him of Daniel's demise. "Father," she said, "I have some bad news to tell you. You have been very sick, so I could not tell you before. Uncle Daniel has been sick with the same thing you have. He wasn't able to get over it and he died. Poor Uncle was ninety-three, you know. That's pretty old." Thomas made no reply. He gazed out the window at his well cultivated fields, his barns that he had built himself—over the whole panorama of his farm where he had toiled all his long life. At last he turned to face his daughter. In a feeble voice he spoke. "Wal, Mary," said he, "Dan'l never did have no vitality."

M-G-M Buys Movie Rights to Famous "Statue of Liberty Play"

Louis B. Mayer, president of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios, announced to-day that he had purchased for the company the exclusive movie rights for the now famous "Statue of Liberty" football play which was executed by the Washington and Lee football team in Florida on last Thanksgiving Day. Mr. Mayer stated that he plans to use the theme as the plot for a five-reel super-comedy, with either Billy Lott, the original star, as leading man; or Snub Pollard, or W. C. Fields. In either case, Charley Murray will co-star and enact the part of Gene White, Washington and Lee's versatile fullback.

Much excitement is abroad in Lexington concerning the intended picturization of this "epic of the century" and most of the students are in hopes that Mr. Lott will accept Mr. Mayer's handsome offer to star in the vehicle, as many feel that only he can accomplish with any degree of polished skill the intricacies of this great play which will probably never be duplicated on an American football field.

As the reader will remember, the "Statue of Liberty" play was an impromptu measure adopted by the local team in a final desperate effort to snatch defeat from the hands of the wily 'Gators, and was so successfully executed that the Washington and Lee team was only defeated by a 20-7 score. What the score might have been had not this clever strategy been employed, we hesitate to say.

The mechanism of the play is very intricate. The wily Lott called for a very simple formation, from which either a pass or an end-run could be worked. The halfback and quarterback stood on the right hand side of the line, while the stalwart fullback planted himself firmly on the left side and glowered at his opponents. Lott himself stood well back: from which position he could survey the field of action and select the man to whom he might throw the ball. The signals were called, a pass being indicated. The ball was bucked back, the lines swung into action, the number one back smashed the tackle, number two back sucked the end out with him; the stage was set for the pass. Lott stood with the ball poised, truly a replica of the Statue of Liberty. Men were running hither and yon. Someone shouted. Still Lott did not move. The 'Gator right end swept in on the small ball-tosser. The loyal fullback gave him a mean look, a very, very mean look. The 'Gator end was brave, however, and kept coming. He swept magnificently up to our field general, snatched the proffered ball from his outstretched hand and raced to a touchdown.

The doughty Lott smiled, turned to the photographer on the sidelines and asked: "Did you get me all right?"

The play was so cleverly and quickly executed that the audience was spell-bound. When the full meaning of the thing came to them, they responded nobly, and many were the cheers that echoed across the field.

So much interest has been displayed in the play that M-G-M decided to grant the public its wish to see it performed, and now all indications point toward their being not only able to see the play itself performed, but performed by the originator and executor of it.

Mr. Mayer stated that the work will be started on the picture immediately, and it will probably be released by next September. The public will meanwhile impatiently await its appearance, and there seems to be little doubt as to the success of the venture.

Mary: "John, keep your hands off me."
 John: "Aw, Mary, haven't you a heart?"
 Mary: "Sure, but you have been looking for it long enough now."

A negro mammy had sent her little Rastus to the spring for water. A few minutes later she happened to look out the window and saw her little off-spring tearing across the field as fast as his short, black legs would carry him. He dashed into the house with his face the color of putty and his hair standing on end.

Mammy: "Chile, how come you didn't bring mah wata'?"

Rastus: "Mammy, dey is a alligator in de spring."

Mammy: "Go way, boy. Dey ain't no alligator in dat spring. Go get mah wata'. Even if dey is a alligator in dat spring, don't you know he would be just as 'fraid of you as you is of him, Rastus?"

Rastus: "Well, mammy, if dat is so dey ain't no use of me going afta' no wata', 'cause if dat alligator is as scared of me as I is of him, dat wata' ain't fit to drink by now."

The Cynic

Two laughing lips entice me saying, "Come,
 Drink of my cup and know the joys of life.
 Taste of my honeyed wine and learn of loving.
 Rest on my bow your worldly war and strife."

"Lay in their scabbards Trouble, Care and Worry,
 Lock in their castles Sorrow and Dismay;
 Seal in its vault the curse of Yellow Worship;
 Shake from your vision Glory's feet of clay."

"Drink of my cup and feel your pulses thrillling;
 Look in my eyes and see your destiny;
 We shall be King and Queen of Love;—So kiss me,
 Lover of Love, and join yourself to me."

I long to say, "I will," and do their bidding,
 Drinking myself into forgetfulness;
 Learning of Love and all its vaunted virtues,
 Even the pain of loving to excess—

Leaving the world of toil and tears behind me,
 Fleeing the horrors of reality;
 Keeping perpetually intoxicated,
 Filled with the wine of scarlet ecstasy.

That would be life in all the sense of living;
 Yet in the end, I sigh and turn away.
 Am I a saint? Ah no, I'm merely careful,
 There's too much poison liquor loose today.

One Saturday morning at about eleven o'clock an unusual occurrence took place on the campus of Washington and Lee. Loud cheers and a great rumbling noise smote the ear. Reverberations from this unusual phenomena, which was in front of Newcomb Hall, penetrated even into Mr. Fletcher's gymnasium. Duke Desha, chairman of the Faculty Committee of Social Functions, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Faculty, chairman of the Committee of Waterwagons, chairman of, etc., etc., ad infinitum, thinking that something must be wrong, rushed to the scene. He found a rapidly increasing body of students beneath the windows of the registrar's office. He grinned gleefully now as he knew that something was wrong, because all of the students should either be in the Post Office or on the way to Lynchburg at this hour. The shouting continued with even greater vigor and the Duke determined to see the cause of it. He wormed his way agilely to the center of the crowd and saw standing before him a youth whose countenance was wreathed in smiles of Lindberghian modesty. Everyone seemed to be congratulating him and trying to shake his hand at once. "What is the meaning of all this confusion?" the Duke demanded of the assemblage. "He has just sold Mattingly a book on 'How to Acquire Self Confidence'," explained the admiring students. * * *

"Why the socks on inside out, Francis?"

"Egad, Norris, my feet were hot so I turned the hose on 'em." * * *

"Don't bother me, Harold. I don't know, and besides he won't ask you whether Joan of Arc was Noah's wife."

Joe: "That girl is a spy."

Jim: "Why?"

Joe: "She's hiding something from us."

The Phi Beta Kappa graduate of Washington and Lee Engineering School was about to see his greatest dreams realized. The huge bridge which had occupied his every moment, sleeping and waking, for four years was about to be officially dedicated. At the height of the celebration, when hundreds of people were gathered on the bridge, the center span—with a crash that was heard for miles—fell into the river, a mass of twisted steel and bodies. The frenzied mayor, seeing the engineer, dashed up to him. "See what you have done!" he cried.

The engineer, without the slightest expression on his face, replied:

"I had a hunch all along that that decimal point was in the wrong place."

Wife: "Harry, aren't you ashamed. I could smell your breath in the dark."

Harry: "Hic, puta lightsh out an' prove itsh!" * * *

A farmer, observing an attractive young woman drive up to his store on a motorcycle, stuck his head out of the window and said:

"It's getting pretty hot between here and Lexington, isn't it?"

To which the young woman replied:

"If you'd driven as fast from Lexington as I have, you'd be hot too."

Afterword

THIS is the end. We offer you the 1928 CALYX with the hope that it will be of sufficient merit to deserve and receive your appreciation and approval. We have tried to catch the fleeting beauty of a year that is gone, to write herein the history of your achievements in order that you may refresh your memories in future years with the glamour of the past.

The Editor is glad that this one page is truly his, and that he is privileged to use it in the expression of his sincere appreciation to those who have helped make this CALYX possible. After all, it is only fitting that the last words should go by way of tribute to M. M. Junkin, whose drawings have caught the spirit of this book, and to Benson Printing Co., the Capitol Engraving Co., White Studio, and the Y. M. C. A. for their courteous and able assistance.

MAIN STREET

They were discussing love and its attendant mysteries and delights, and after several tales by him, she asserted that she had never been in love, which led to the following dissertation:

He: "Do you mean to say that you have never been in love; have never felt the thrill of heart to heart embrace and the pleasure-like pain concealed in a throbbing lover's kiss?"

She: "No."

He: "Well, haven't you ever even called it love?"

Geo. D. Hunter
Gen. Pass. Agt.
Dallas, Texas

A new arrival was expected in the Jones family and so Mary, aged ten, was sent away to the country to spend the interval with her grandmother, while Jack, aged twelve, was allowed to remain. Soon after the momentous event had successfully been completed, Jack was given a telegram to send to Mary reading, "Stork arrived today and you now have a new brother." A few hours later the following telegram was received by Mary, "It was a boy, I win."

"What makes the world go around, Pop?"

"My son, how many times must I tell you to stay out of the cellar?"

FOX'S CAFE

ALL works of quality must bear a price in proportion to the skill, time, expense, and risk attending their invention and manufacture. Those things called dear are, when justly estimated, the cheapest. They are attended with much less profit to the artist than those things which everybody calls cheap.

Beautiful forms and compositions are not made by chance, nor can they ever, in any material, be made at small expense.

A composition for cheapness, and not for excellence of workmanship, is the most frequent and certain cause for the rapid decay and entire destruction of arts and manufacture.—Ruskin.

“Humum pedibus pellamus”

Thus did the Latin youth urge his fair puella to respond to the strains of the lyre.

Down through the years youth has never failed to answer the cry of “On with the dance.”

But youth needs no urging when the syn-copating melody of ROSS GORMAN’S OR-CHESTRA fills the Gym and the clarinet blares an invitation to forget the cares of the day and be lost in the joys of the dance.

“The proof of the music is the dancing thereto--”

A pudding is eaten, a book is read, a movie seen, a pipe smoked, while an orchestra must be danced to to prove its smoothness.

Oliver Naylor and His Orchestra can stand the test.

Their superb entertainment is novel and most enjoyable and their Southern style of dance rhythm is practically irresistible.

Engagements are booked through Oliver Naylor Orchestras, Suite 404 at 1650 Broadway, New York City.
